African American Males:

Beyond the School to Prison Pipeline and Moving Toward Opportunity

May 11, 2007 • 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.
Saxbe Auditorium, Drinko Hall
Moritz College of Law

The Multicultural Center
• Commission on African American Males
• Bell Resource Center on the African American Male • Black Graduate and Professional Student Caucus • College of Public Health
• Department of African American and African Studies • College of Education and Human Ecology

This conference will focus on the different and sometimes subtle ways in which the educational system and prison system interact to create disparate situations for African American males. Top scholars from across the country will gather at Ohio State to discuss factors and policies that contribute to the success of black males and solutions and recommendations for alleviating the disparities males face. Central to the focus of this conference is not only to understand the pressing issues males encounter, but to bring to light a deeper understanding of the factors that support economic, political, and social opportunities for males.

Featuring opening remarks by Senator Ray Miller and closing remarks by Judge Yvette McGee Brown

This event is free and open to the public.
