Race to Execution is a gripping documentary which offers a compelling investigation of the racial disparities that persist in our society and affect our criminal justice system. The film features the personal stories of two death row inmates along with testimony from defense attorneys, prosecutors, scholars, media experts and family members involved.

Juror Number Six examines media and race, crime, and punishment, including the death penalty. It analyzes the effect television news, entertainment, and the Internet have on people as they step into the jury box, providing examples ranging from the O.J. Simpson trial to citizen journalism today.
